Art Department

Flying solo since last year, Jonny White carries the Art Department torch and all its accolades to Sound. Expect fresh cuts from any of White's three record labels for a tough and deep night of house music.

QUESTION & ANSWER: ARTIST FEATURE

ART DEPARTMENT

by Deanna Rilling

Thank our neighbors from the Great White North for the sweet sounds of export Art Department. Jonny White will dig deep into house and grace the decks at Sound on June 3.

For those that may not have checked you out before, what's in store for them for the gig at Sound?

I'm never really sure until I show up to the gig, to be honest. Can't really decide what to do without feeling out the room. Probably a bit tougher sound-wise since the last time I was there with Kenny [Glasgow].

What's the transition been like from duo to solo act?

Luckily it's been as smooth as we both could have hoped for; I think because it was publicly a very amicable split versus a huge mess that some bands go through. There's been a ton of support for Kenny's upcoming solo project and the AD fans were so fucking cool about it. Everyone's been showing me mad love across the globe.

When might we see a next album?

A next album? The thought hadn't even entered my mind. I'm taking some time to write a few singles for my new label, Social Experiment, now, some really rugged dancefloor stuff, and fucking around writing some rock and some hip-hop. I don't feel like I have a new electronic album's worth of material in me at the moment. I like the pressure-free writing vibe right now.

What's in store for No. 19 Music?

Kenny's solo album Circus Tales is weeks away. I've got a single coming out that I collaborated on with an artist named Mario J shortly that will debut on my upcoming Renaissance Mix compilation. I would love to run through everything and plug plug plug, but with three labels now it's going to be a novel. Check out the two new vinyl imprints, Sunday Money and Social Experiment, for some dope new stuff. See you June 3 LA. Peace!

Michael Gladstone presents Stimulus

Stimulus brings to Los Angeles a fun and forward-thinking Sunday evening dance event for the LGBT community and its friends, something the city has been missing for many years. Created by Michael Gladstone, a long-time lover of great dance music and fun parties, it combines the best aspects of the classic East Coast tea dance with the modern nightclub experience, with a variety of music from deep house to techno and trance. The crowd is diverse, encompassing all ages and walks of life, and carries the feeling of hanging with old friends. If you crave danceable upbeat music and a welcoming group of people in a fantastic nightclub, Stimulus is the event for you.

FRIDAY HOROSCOPE:

It's Friday the 13th. The stars are aligned, it's an unlucky day, a bulbous full moon will arise at sundown, and mercury is in Gatorade again. You know what all of that means? Absolutely fucking nothing! If a black cat crosses your path, you're probably hallucinating since you're a legitimate crackhead. No matter what you do this weekend, keep in mind that you've had a long week. Pluto's gravitational pull may send you to EDC New York because you have a backstage connection but don't give in, Virgo. You'll see the child you babysat for 4 years ago tripping in a tent. Settle for a mimosa and Netflix. And always remember, universe wants the best for you. Or the worst. Probably the latter.

SANDER KLEINENBERG

QUESTION & ANSWER: ARTIST FEATURE

The Dutch DJ/producer Sander Kleinenberg has two decades of electronic music chops. He'll bring those veteran skills to Sound on June 25.

What are you looking forward to most about playing Sound?

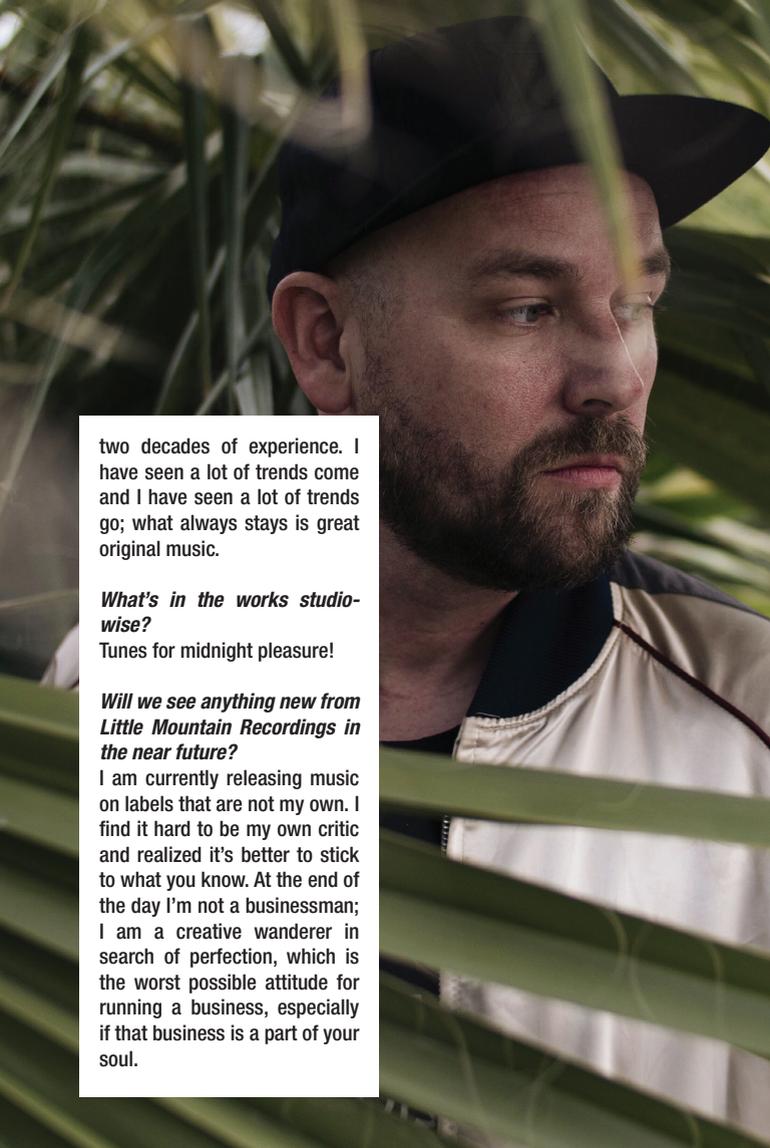

Sound is simply one of my favorite places to play in the US. It feels and acts like a family and the vibes and response everybody gets in that room is second to none, and I haven't even started to talk about the bars, the incredible sound system, and the staff.

Will you be bringing a digital component to your gig at Sound?

The component I bring is the new music that I'm road testing and of course a whole lot of passion, I'm never really sure how the set up is going to be, all I know is that I come to bring a good time.

You said previously you prefer to simply refer to your sound as house music. Does it irk you when people call your music "progressive house," especially considering what currently seems to define the sound?

I don't mind what people call the music I play; I don't really pay attention to anything else but my own gut feeling, my fans and the dancefloor in general. That's what dictates where I'm going and I think this attitude comes for the two decades of experience. I have seen a lot of trends come and I have seen a lot of trends go; what always stays is great original music.

What's in the works studio-wise?

Tunes for midnight pleasure!

Will we see anything new from Little Mountain Recordings in the near future?

I am currently releasing music on labels that are not my own. I find it hard to be my own critic and realized it's better to stick to what you know. At the end of the day I'm not a businessman; I am a creative wanderer in search of perfection, which is the worst possible attitude for running a business, especially if that business is a part of your soul.

REMEMBERING NYC NIGHTLIFE ICON

Rob Fernandez

A star went out in the nightlife universe when the “King of New York” passed away. While it’s been almost a year since his death last July of heart-related issues, Rob Fernandez left such a huge hole in the industry, Sound wanted to pay tribute to his integral role in shaping the scene.

A prominent engineer and promoter in the New York City scene, Fernandez worked his way up the ladder. His foray into the club world began with a post as a doorman for the Sound Factory Bar in the '90s. With his foot literally in the door of the house music movement, he was lured in by the sounds of residents Frankie Knuckles and Little Louie Vega. Launching into throwing his own parties, Fernandez had a knack for taking risks that worked, like on his hip-hop night Phab for the gay scene. But it was several of his weekly Rob Promotions events that made huge impacts on the underground scene in New York: Subliminal Sessions with Erick Morillo at Centro-Fly and Be Yourself with Danny Tenaglia at Vinyl.

When it came to theme parties, Fernandez’s creativity was boundless. The Sunday night Assesteria with tribal house kept the weekend going into Monday morning. The Thursday night DanceHereNow at Cielo was an intimate look at burgeoning DJs that left the megastars clamoring to play there, too. While running RPM Presents, he brought dance music to Governors Island and Radio City Music Hall. Throughout his career, he also promoted parties at Twilo, Palladium, Limelight and ultimately Pacha NYC where he filled the role of Director of Promotions and Bookings.

As the EDM boom took over, Fernandez maintained the people on the dancefloor are more important than the headliner, aiming to continue the traditions of inclusion. Fernandez is survived by his son, Rian, mother Sharon, siblings Kim and Laurie and Rian’s mother Viviana.
